Health and Beauty

We do not need as much iodine as we need calcium and iron ---- one-hundredth as much iodine as iron. It is a good thing that our need for iodine is small because it occurs in extremely small amounts in food and water.

Iodine is stored in the thyroid for a considerable length of time, cutting down on the danger of an over-dose occurring. We are not referring to tincture of iodine, as prepared as an antiseptic, for this is poison.

About three-fifths of the body's supply of iodine is stored in the thyroid gland. It is also used in the lymph glands, the cerebrospinal fluid, perspiration, chyle (a fluid used in the digestive process), in fluids which collect in the body when abnormal swelling is present, in fluids of the membranes that surround the lungs, and breast milk.

For many years people have known about the relationship between lack of iodine and goiter formation. There are other diseases that are believed to be due to iodine deficiency. In animals a deficiency of iodine has resulted in breeding difficulties.

It is interesting that a pollution of drinking water seems to nullify the iodine in the body.

There is much disagreement about the amount of iodine one needs every day, and no set minimum daily requirement has been established. But it is approximately from .04 to .10 milligrams. If you live in an area where goiter is common, your family doctor may give you an iodine supplement. However, iodine prepared as a drug or medicine must be very carefully prescribed, for an overdose can be extremely serious.

If you live in a golterous region and take very little salt in your diet, you can safely include in your diet such foods as asparagus, chard turnip tops, seafoods, and fish liver oil.

A list of nature and conservation books recommended for purchase by civic groups for elementary and high school libraries is included in the free Virginia Game Commision leaflet entitled "You Can help In Conservation."

An attractive 28-page illustrated booklet on "Animal Tracks and How to Know Them" is distributed free by the Virginia Game Commission, Richmond.

About The Home

Given just common-sense care, a piano should last for many years. Every person owning a piano needs to familiarize himself with the basic rules of keeping his piano in good working order.

One of the most common faults of piano owners is their failure to get the service of a competent piano tuner to keep the key-action mechanism of their piano adjusted properly.

A piano should never be placed near a heating unit of any type. Changes in atmospheric conditions are important factors in getting a piano out of tune.

It is agood idea to hang a ₵m- phor rag in the piano to repel moths that feed on the felt and cloths in the instrument. A piano tuner can apply a solution that will repel moths for as long as two years.

When a piano is moved into a new home adjust itself to its new atmospheric environment. For this reason it is well to have the piano tuned at least four times the first year. There after three times annually will do.

If there is the least motion in the touch of a piano it is usually caused by an atmosphere that is too hot and dry. The remedy for this is a humidifier in the room.

The fifty-two white keys are made of wood covered with ivory or ivory-like plastic. The black keys are no longer made of ebony but are plastic or hardwood dyed black. Both sets of keys can be cleaned with a damp cloth.

Keep the propped lid of a grand down when not in use, to keep out dust.

IN FASHION NOW

The latest from Paris is that hemlines and waistlines are coming down for the Spring of 1959. Paris dressmakers are said to be re-discovering the female form after several seasons of fashionable distortions.

This will be a blow to some of us — those who are just beginning to enjoy the Empire line and the sack. What about women who have invested quite a few dollars in this trend on the assumption that it would be with us for a while?

The hemline drop is unlikely to be a radical one. It will cover the kneecap with a few inches to spare. The high-waisted Empire line that blanketed the important collections in Paris, New York, Rome, and London will be out. The idea must have come from the fact that skirts could go no higher without becoming indecent, and waistlines can't climb higher without strangling the neck.

The reason for the rapid changes in styles we find today was explained by an outstanding designer as, — when a fashion trend arrives "in the streets" it is sure deth, and, second, nowadays the most successful new lines are copied in ready-mades right away, instead of the old delay of two or three years.

There will be more than usual emphasis on hair this season. Ladies lucky enough to own important jeweled clips will transfer them to the hair.

Tiaras will be fashionable again, along with a number of new designs to call attention to your crown- glory.
